Oppenheimer Rochester Minnesota Municipal Fund (collectively, the “Oppenheimer Rochester Funds,” and together with the Franklin Funds, “Plaintiffs”), by and through their attorneys, and very respectfully state, allege and pray as follows:

NATURE OF THIS ACTION

1. This is an action for a declaratory judgment brought pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 2201 and 2202 and Rule 57 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure for the purpose of determining a substantial and actual controversy between the parties. As set forth more fully below, Plaintiffs seek a declaration that the Public Corporation Debt Enforcement and Recovery Act (the “Act”) enacted by the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico (the “Commonwealth”) violates multiple provisions of the United States Constitution (the “Constitution”).

2. Under the Constitution, the Commonwealth has no power to enact a bankruptcy law for the adjustment of the debts of its instrumentalities and public corporations where the Congress of the United States has enacted the Bankruptcy Code, excluded Puerto Rico’s instrumentalities from its reach, and explicitly indicated that states have no power to enact their own laws providing for the adjustment of such debts. See 11 U.S.C. § 903. The Act is therefore unconstitutional in its entirety. Moreover, specific provisions of the Act, if enforced, would inflict further constitutional injuries in violation of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments and Article 1, section 10, of the Constitution.

THE PARTIES, JURISDICTION, AND VENUE

3. Plaintiffs Franklin Funds are Delaware corporations or trusts with their principal place of business in San Mateo, California. Collectively, the Franklin Funds hold approximately $907,195,000 of Power Revenue Bonds (the “PREPA Bonds”) issued by the Puerto Rico Electric Power Authority (“PREPA”) pursuant to the Puerto Rico Electric Power Authority Act (“Act 83”) and the Trust Agreement between PREPA and U.S. Bank National Association as Successor Trustee (the “Trustee”), dated as January 1, 1974, as amended and supplemented through August 1, 2011 (the “Trust Agreement”). The PREPA Bonds are secured by a pledge of all or substantially all of the present and future revenues of PREPA.

4. Plaintiffs Oppenheimer Rochester Funds are Delaware corporations or trusts with their principal place of business in Rochester, New York. Collectively, the Oppenheimer Rochester Funds hold approximately $821,440,000 of PREPA Bonds.

5. Defendant Commonwealth is a United States territory subject to the laws of the United States and the plenary jurisdiction of the Congress.

6. Defendant Governor Alejandro García Padilla (the “Governor”) is the Governor of the Commonwealth and is sued in his official capacity.

7. Defendant John Doe (the “GDB Agent”) is an employee or other agent of the Government Development Bank for Puerto Rico (“GDB”) who is empowered to authorize or direct a public corporation to seek relief under the Act on behalf of the GDB. On information and belief, GDB is a public corporation organized under the laws of the Commonwealth that serves as a bank, fiscal agent, and financial advisor to the Commonwealth. GDB is headquartered in the Commonwealth.

8. On information and belief, defendant PREPA is a public corporation organized under the laws of the Commonwealth that provides electrical power to residents and businesses located in the Commonwealth.

9. This action arises under the Constitution, Article I, Section 8; Article I, Section 10; and the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments. This Court may render a declaratory judgment pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § § 2201 and 2202 and Fed. R. Civ. P. 57.

10. Venue is properly laid in this district pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1391(b).

BACKGROUND

11. On June 25, 2014, citing a “fiscal emergency” relating to certain of its public corporations, the Commonwealth’s Senate (Senado) voted to approve the Act. The following day, the Commonwealth House of Representatives (Cámara de Representantes) similarly voted to approve the Act. Upon information and belief, the Governor signed the Act into law on Saturday, June 28, 2014.

12. The Act purports to offer to certain public corporations within the Commonwealth the ability, among other things, to invoke protections from creditors and modify debts. The Act is expressly modeled on title 11 of the United States Code (the “Bankruptcy Code”).

13. The Act provides in sections 202(b) and 301(b) that the GDB (and, in certain instances, the Governor) must authorize and/or direct a public corporation to seek relief under the Act before such public corporation may invoke the protections afforded under the Act.

14. On or about June 26, 2014, the Rating Agency Fitch downgraded the PREPA Bonds from “BB” to “CC,” based upon the introduction and passage of the Act.

15. On information and belief, since the Commonwealth’s Senate voted to approve the Act, the trading prices of long-dated PREPA Bonds (those maturing in 20 years or more) have dropped by an estimated 15 percent, while the trading prices for shorter dated PREPA Bonds (those maturing over the next four years) have dropped by an estimated 35-40 percent.

16. On information and belief, PREPA will file for relief under the Act imminently. For example, the legislative history to the Act notes that “Public corporations of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico that provide essential public services, PREPA being the most dramatic example, today face significant operational, fiscal, and financial challenges.” See P. del S. 1164 at 148.

17. Accordingly, the legislative history to the Act makes clear that PREPA is to be its inaugural candidate.

THE ACTUAL CONTROVERSY

18. By enacting the Act, the Commonwealth and the Governor purport to create legal powers that would violate the Constitution to the detriment of Plaintiffs and other creditors of the Commonwealth’s public corporations. If the Governor or the GDB Agent authorizes a Commonwealth public corporation to seek relief under the Act, this will perpetuate the constitutional violations described herein.

19. Article I, Section 8 of the Constitution provides that “[t]he Congress shall have the power . . . [t]o establish . . . uniform laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States” (the “Bankruptcy Clause”). See U.S. CONST. art. I, § 8, cl. 4. The Supreme Court ruled two hundred years ago that a state may not enact a bankruptcy law where either it is inconsistent with a bankruptcy law passed by Congress or it constitutes an impairment of contract forbidden by U.S. CONST. art. I, § 10, cl. 1. (the “Contracts Clause”). See Sturges v. Crowninshield, 17 U.S. 122, 1819 LEXIS 310 (1819). The legislative history to the Act indicates that “[t]his Act is designed in many respects to mirror certain key provisions of title 11 of the United States Code, and courts and stakeholders are encouraged to review and consider existing precedent under title 11 of the United States Code . . . when interpreting and applying this Act.” See, e.g., P. del S. 1164 at 159.

20. The legislative history further states that, in enacting the Act, the legislature “has adopted a model similar to that of chapter 9 of title 11 of the United States Code” and “clearly expresses its intent that jurisprudence interpreting the provisions of chapter 9 of title 11 of the United States Code be used . . . for purposes of interpreting the provisions . . . of this Act.” See P. del S. 1164 at 164.

21. Indeed, the Act purports to confer on eligible debtors numerous powers and benefits that are similar or identical to those provided in the Bankruptcy Code, including, but not limited to:

- i. the ability to modify debt obligations and force creditors to accept partial satisfaction of their claims in the event threshold levels of creditor support for a restructuring plan can be obtained;
- ii. the capacity to obtain debtor-in-possession financing by granting priority liens on already encumbered property;
- iii. an automatic stay of proceedings against the debtor;
- iv. protection from the operation of contractual ipso facto clauses;
- v. the ability to reject contracts; and
- vi. a discharge in the form of a permanent prohibition against enforcement of debts that are dealt with under the Act.

22. The Act also provides for the formation of statutory creditors’ committees, court oversight of a plan of reorganization, and other features commonly associated with the federal bankruptcy regime.

23. The Act thus clearly prescribes methods for composition of indebtedness. It also provides for judgments rendered under the Act to bind creditors who have not consented to such composition.

24. The United States Congress has enacted the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. §§ 101 et seq.

25. Section 903 of the Bankruptcy Code provides as follows:

This chapter does not limit or impair the power of a State to control, by legislation or otherwise, a municipality of or in such State in the exercise of the political or governmental powers of such municipality, including expenditures for such exercise, but—

(1) a State law prescribing a method of composition of indebtedness of such municipality may not bind any creditor that does not consent to such composition; and

(2) a judgment entered under such a law may not bind a creditor that does not consent to such composition.

26. The definition of “municipality” includes an “instrumentality” such as the public corporations covered by the Act, 11 U.S.C. § 101(40); the Commonwealth has conceded as much. Section 903 is an explicit statement of Congress’ intent that the Bankruptcy Code, and only the Bankruptcy Code, governs the adjustment of debts of a municipality. The Act is thus unconstitutional in its entirety as a bankruptcy law pre-empted by the Bankruptcy Code.

27. The Act also contains numerous provisions that, standing alone, both differ from the Bankruptcy Code and exceed defendants’ powers to enact and enforce legislation and therefore violate the Constitution.

28. First, the Act provides in section 322(c) that a debtor may obtain credit “secured by a senior or equal lien on the petitioner’s property that is subject to a previous lien, without any protection for such previous lien,” if, among other things, “the proceeds are needed to perform public functions.” This provision authorizes PREPA to seize the collateral securing Plaintiffs’ PREPA Bonds for the purpose of securing additional lending for itself.

29. The Fifth Amendment to the Constitution provides that “private property [shall not] be taken for public use, without just compensation” (the “Takings Clause”). See U.S.

CONST. amend. V. The Takings Clause applies to the states, and the Commonwealth, by virtue of Section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment. See U.S. CONST. amend. XIV, § 1. The Bankruptcy Code gives effect to the Takings Clause by precluding the grant of a superior lien unless existing liens are “adequately protected”, 11 U.S.C. § 364(d)(1).

30. A grant of a superior lien on property that is already subject to a lien without just compensation (or, in the words of the Bankruptcy Code, “adequate protection”) to existing lienholders, as authorized by section 322(c) of the Act, constitutes a taking in violation of the Takings Clause. The Act, in effect, provides Puerto Rico the power to expropriate private property for no compensation (and no adequate protection) when Puerto Rico asserts the need to do so. While section 129 of the Act purports to permit the provision of adequate protection, it expands and renders optional the concept of adequate protection to the point of meaninglessness.

31. Second, the Act provides in section 202 that a creditor may be forced to accept a modification of its debt instrument provided that fifty percent of the creditors in a given “class” vote on such a modification, and 75 percent of those who submit ballots vote in favor of such modification. Thus, the Act would force Plaintiffs to accept partial payment on their secured PREPA Bonds if other holders of PREPA Bonds vote to accept partial payment. A state law may not force a municipality’s secured bondholders to accept a composition of their indebtedness merely because other holders have voted to do so.

32. Worse, sections 312 and 315 provide that, upon acceptance by a single creditor class and court approval, a public corporation may enforce a restructuring plan that extinguishes creditors’ claims and may provide only partial satisfaction of such creditors’ claims. Thus, the Act would force Plaintiffs to accept partial payment on the PREPA Bonds even if every single PREPA bondholder voted against a restructuring plan that a small class of unrelated creditors voted to accept. A state law may not force a municipality's secured bondholders to accept a composition of their indebtedness merely because creditors in other classes (such as unsecured trade creditors or employees) have voted to accept a composition of their own claims.

33. Finally, Sections 115(b)(2) and 115(c)(3) of the Act permanently enjoin enforcement of any debt that is dealt with by a plan under either Chapter 2 or Chapter 3 of the Act, including Plaintiffs' Bonds which are secured by a pledge of all or substantially all of the present and future revenues of PREPA. These sections constitute a "discharge" of both the claims under Plaintiffs' Bonds and an impairment or elimination of the liens securing those claims.

34. Article 1, section 10 of the United States Constitution provides that "No State shall . . . pass any . . . Law impairing the Obligation of Contracts" (the "Contract Clause"). See U.S. CONST. art. I, § 10, cl. 1.

35. The mechanisms set forth in sections 115, 202, 312, and 315 of the Act deprive creditors of their contractual rights to payment in full of their claims, thus impairing contractual obligations in violation of the Contract Clause. See Sturges v. Crowninshield, 17 U.S. 122, 1819 U.S. LEXIS 310 at 13 (1819).

36. To the extent these mechanisms also deprive secured creditors of the benefits of their security interests, they also effectuate a violation of the Takings Clause.

37. Third, the Act provides in section 304 that a public corporation's filing for relief triggers an automatic stay of all proceedings against the corporation and any related proceedings against the Commonwealth and any elected official or employee of the corporation.

38. However, pursuant to Donovan v. City of Dallas, 377 U.S. 408 (1964), and its progeny, state courts lack any power under the Constitution to enjoin proceedings in federal court. Thus, to the extent it is argued the seeking of relief under the Act creates an automatic stay of any actions or proceedings in any federal court or any authority in a court of the Commonwealth to impose or extend such a stay, such purported powers violate well-settled constitutional limits on the power of state courts.

39. By the same token, the Commonwealth cannot pass a law that denies litigants access to federal courts. To the extent any provision of the Act enjoins, stays, suspends or precludes Plaintiffs from exercising their rights in federal court, including their right to challenge the constitutionality of the Act itself in federal court, those provisions also violate the Constitution.

CLAIM FOR RELIEF

40. Plaintiffs repeat and reallege the allegations contained in paragraphs 1 through 37 of this complaint.

41. The operation of the Act, as enacted by the Commonwealth and signed into law by the Governor, threatens to improperly impair Plaintiffs' rights under the PREPA Bonds in contravention to the Bankruptcy Clause, the Takings Clause, and the Contract Clause.

42. Moreover, by authorizing a public corporation to seek relief under the Act, the Governor or the GDB Agent would be furthering these violations of the Bankruptcy Clause, the Takings Clause, and the Contract Clause.

43. An actual case or controversy exists between Plaintiffs and the Commonwealth with respect to the constitutionality of the Act.

44. An actual case or controversy exists between Plaintiffs and the Governor with respect to the constitutionality of the Act and the Governor's authority to authorize any entity to seek protection under the Act.

45. An actual case or controversy exists between Plaintiffs and the GDB Agent with respect to the constitutionality of the Act and the GDB Agent's authority to authorize any entity to seek protection under the Act.

46. An actual case or controversy exists between Plaintiffs and PREPA with respect to the constitutionality of the Act and PREPA's authority to seek protection under the Act.

47. Plaintiffs are entitled to a declaratory judgment pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2201 and Fed. R. Civ. P. 57 that the Act is unconstitutional.

48. No means exist to obtain the relief requested other than a declaratory judgment by this Court.

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs demand judgment:

- i. declaring that the Act in its entirety, and any prospective enforcement thereof or authorization thereunder, violates Article I, Section 8 of the United States Constitution as an improper exercise of bankruptcy legislation by a body other than the Congress of the United States;
- ii. declaring that the Act, and any prospective enforcement thereof or authorization thereunder, violates Article I, Section 10, clause 1 of the United States Constitution insofar as it permits the retroactive impairment of Plaintiffs' rights under the contracts governing the PREPA Bonds;
- iii. declaring that the Act, and any prospective enforcement thereof or authorization thereunder, violates the Fifth Amendment and the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution insofar as it permits the taking of Plaintiffs' interests in the collateral securing the PREPA Bonds;

- iv. declaring that the Act, and any prospective enforcement thereof or authorization thereunder, violates the Constitution insofar as it authorizes any stay of federal court proceedings;
- v. awarding costs, including attorneys' fees; and
- vi. granting such other and further relief as the Court deems just and proper.

RESPECTFULLY SUBMITTED.
